Contents

Preface  ix
The roadmap  xi

1 Mapping the meaning of “transaction”
1.1. The ideas of transactions in Coase (1937) and (1960)  2
1.2. John Commons’s formulation of transaction  5
1.3. Each transaction is “coercive” – the contribution of Robert Lee Hale to transactional theory  9
1.4. The specific transaction à la Williamson  12

2 The three dimensions of a transaction
2.1. The concept of transaction in the textbook perfect competition context  17
2.2. Introducing the legal dimension of a transaction  19
2.3. Introducing the competitive dimension of a transaction  23
2.4. Introducing the political dimension of a transaction  27
2.5. What should be next? Go back to the past  30

3 The legal dimension of transactions
3.1. The adversarial (or “positional”) nature of legal positions  34
3.2. Positional goods: a primer  37
3.3. Freedom as a positional good  43
3.4. The inevitable costs of defining rights  45

4 The competitive dimension of transactions
4.1. The role of the outside market in the emergence of holdup risk  50
4.2. Oliver Hart’s assignment of residual control rights  53
4.3. Oliver Williamson’s fundamental transformation  55
4.4. The “trade-off” between Hart and Williamson: a reappraisal of the General Motors-Fisher Body case  58
4.5. The road ahead: reconciling Hart with Williamson  61

5 The political dimension of transactions
5.1. The political argument over corporate governance  67
5.2. The role of labour protection policies  69
5.3. The role of competition policies  71
5.4. The role of innovation policies  73
5.5. Blockholding and politics  74

6 Concluding remarks and one (just one, but remarkable) research proposal  77

References  81
Index  91