Jonathan Latner is a postdoctoral research associate in the SECCOPA project, a European Research Commission (ERC) funded project, at Bamberg University. His research interests include, work and occupations (temporary work, technological change), income dynamics (volatility, mobility), income inequality, minimum income, and urban sociology, and these are united by a focus on inequality, specifically long term trends in the relationship between rising economic growth and declining job quality. While most work focuses on the United States and Canada, recent work compares European countries.
