Governing Global Health in Times of Pandemic

JOINT INITIATIVE OF THE FACULTY OF LAW AND THE SCHOOL OF INTERNATIONAL STUDIES - UNIVERSITY OF TRENTO

Trento, 28-29 November 2022

Venues: Department of Economics & Management and Faculty of Law
University of Trento

The COVID19 pandemic has inspired new streams of research in all fields of science, from life sciences to social studies, from humanities to hard sciences, from theoretical to empirical studies. Developing pre-existing and emerging lines of research in all these areas, the University of Trento has coordinated several international projects to contribute to a science-based response to the pandemic. An interdisciplinary approach has characterized many of these projects, based on the belief that no science alone may provide a sufficiently sound answer to global challenges like the one faced during the pandemic.

Moving from this perspective, the School of International Studies and the Faculty of Law have led two international projects in the last two years in the field of global health and fundamental rights: respectively, a project on the functions, limits and territorial impact of the World Health Organization in the COVID-19 emergency (School of International Studies) and a project on COVID-19 litigation raised by the pandemic and, more particularly, by the impact of public health measures upon fundamental rights (Faculty of Law).

Though developed from different perspectives (the former focused on the institutional framework and the role played by international institutions, such as WHO, and the latter focused on the role of courts in the difficult task of balancing health policy needs with fundamental rights and freedoms), the two projects share a common interest in contributing to an international and interdisciplinary debate on global health governance in times of pandemic or comparable health crises.

Based on this, both projects' results will be presented and discussed within a two-days joint initiative co-coordinated by the School of International Studies and the Faculty of Law with a view to explore future research perspectives beyond the current pandemic context.

Rethinking Global Health Law and Governance:

The Quest for Equity in the Reform Process

This part of the Conference gathers together scholars of different disciplines (Law, Sociology, Political Science) to discuss the ongoing reform process of global health law and governance under the aegis of the World Health Organization.

The programme addresses two main topics closely intertwined with each other. The first panel is devoted to the analysis of current developments in the ongoing reform of global health law with a specific focus on the negotiation of the treaty on pandemic preparedness and response and on targeted amendments to the International Health Regulations. The second panel addresses the issue of equity in access to medical care and vaccines as part of the wider debate on the protection of the human right to health, which represent an essential element of the reform process.

This is the closing event of the University of Trento's project titled The World Health Organization in the COVID-19 emergency: functions, limits and territorial impact, which is financed by the University of Trento Covid-19 Research Fund. The project is aimed at analyzing legal and institutional aspects of the international health emergency, the technical tools for their management and the way forward for the improvement of the global health architecture. It has adopted an original approach, involving joint research between scholars in the social sciences and scholars in the hard sciences by crosscutting the growing interest in medical sciences and public health, to provide an integrated response to the challenges raised by the COVID-19 emergency.

This multidisciplinary approach and its relevance to the management of emergencies in the health field are crucial for the University of Trento also in view of the future activities of both the School of International Studies (SIS) and the new School of Medicine (CISMed), supported by the Faculty of Law and the Faculty of Sociology.

COVID-19 Litigation:

The Role of National and International Courts in Health crisis Management

This part of the Conference is aimed at presenting the main results of the COVID19 Litigation Project, coordinated by the University of Trento with the financial support of WHO, the participation of eight project partners in different world regions, and the contribution of a wide network of judges and scholars around the globe. The Project revolves around the COVID19 Litigation Database, collecting almost 2000 cases decided in all continents' courts in the field of fundamental rights affected by public health measures during the COVID19 pandemic. It is aimed to provide policy makers, judges and scholars with a tool for comparative legal analysis.

The panels will involve scholars, representatives of international institutions and supreme courts judges, to discuss whether and how the rule of law and due protection of fundamental rights shall forge public choices and policy decision-making in times of health crises and to what extent judicial decisions may contribute to such balancing.

The interplay between domestic and international laws in pandemic risk management, the role of judicial review in the protection of fundamental rights, the impact of health crises on the most vulnerable ones, will be among the topics addressed during this part of the Conference and provoking an interdisciplinary and inter-professional debate.
